New South Wales Wine History

The very first Australian vineyard was planted in New South Wales in 1791 with vines from settlements in South Africa. The vines were planted in the garden of Arthur Phillip, then Governor of the colony, in a site that is now the location of a hotel on Macquarie Street in Sydney. Phillip's early vineyard did not fare well in the hot, humid climate of the region and he sent a request to the British government for assistance in establishing viticulture in the new colony. The government responded by sending two French prisoners of war, under the assumption that all French citizens must know something about making wine. However, neither men had any viticultural training and the most they were able to produce was peach cider.

In 1824, James Busby was awarded a land grant for 800 hectares (1,980 acres) along the Hunter River which he planted with grapevines, studying the techniques that he would include in his 1830 book A Manual of Plain Directions for Planting and Cultivating Vineyards and for Making Wine in New South Wales. In 1831, Busby toured Europe and collected over 600 vine samples from across the continent and shipped them back to Sydney. Many of these vines survived the trip and were cultivated in New South Wales and from there spread across Australia, introducing new varieties to the land.<sup>1</sup> By the mid 19th century, the wine industry of New South Wales was thriving. In 1855, a sparkling wine from the region was featured at the Paris Exposition Universelle, the same exposition that introduced the Bordeaux Wine Official Classification of 1855. The wine was well received and won the honour of being served during the event's closing ceremonies at the state banquet of Napoleon III.

Santé!

White Selection

Dog Point Sauvignon Blanc, Marlborough, New Zealand

Juicy and mouth filling with vibrant ripe fruit. A fresh line of balanced acidity supports the soft, round texture.

Audrey Wilkinson Semillon Sau Blanc, Hunter Valley, New South Wales

The fresh citrus, lime and lemon characteristics come from the Hunter Valley Semillon, which provides structure, elegance and acid line to the wine. The Sauvignon Blanc provides lifted aromas of passionfruit, guava and stone fruit.

Domaine Christian Salmon Sancerre, Loire Valley, France

Being typically aromatic, the wine opens up with air, taking on more fruity nuances, in particular of ripe pear. A balanced palate of ripe citrus fruits, quartz and minerals .

Red Selection

Nanny Goat Pinot Noir, Central Otago, New Zealand

Medium-bodied on the palate and is loaded with dark plums and soft, fine-grained tannins. It has a refreshing structural acidity ending in a long and lingering finish with a lick of spice.

Philip Shaw No. 17 Cabernet Merlot Franc, Orange, New South Wales

Beautifully composed wine balancing fruit and savouriness. The nose is dominated by dark berry fruits with undertones of dried herbs. The palate is dense yet refined showing beautiful berry fruits and earthy notes. No 17 is persistent and finishes with supple fruit tannins.

Dourthe No.1 Cabernet Merlot, Bordeaux, France

Exhibits flavours of blackcurrant and mulberry infused with toasty cedar, black olives and spice. Quite supple in its mouthfeel with a dryish finish and finely grained tannins. Aftertaste of spicy toasted cedar, blackcurrant, mulberries and black olives.

Champagne!

The Romans were the first to plant vineyards in this area of north-east France, with the region being tentatively cultivated by the 5th century

In France the first sparkling Champagne was created accidentally; the pressure in the bottle led it to be called "the devil's wine" (le vin du diable), as bottles exploded or corks popped. At the time, bubbles were considered a fault. Champagne did not use the méthode champenoise until the 19th century, about 200 years after Merret documented the process. The 19th century saw an exponential growth in Champagne production, going from a regional production of 300,000 bottles a year in 1800 to 20 million bottles in 1850. In 2007, Champagne sales hit an all-time record of 338.7 million bottles.
